A Message from the President

Welcome to SGS's 43rd Annual Meeting and Conference

As President of the Southern Gerontological Society, I am truly honored to welcome you to Norfolk, VA for our 44th Annual Meeting. The Southern Gerontological Society is a welcoming and supportive network of practitioners, policymakers, scholars, and other professionals in the field of aging. The theme of this meeting, Advancing Effective Solutions: The Interplay of Social Determinants of Health and Health Disparities, is woven throughout the conference, as many of our panel discussions, papers, workshops, and posters address these solutions directly.

It is too bad that I can't be in more than one place at a time, because I will have to miss many wonderful presentations throughout the conference. For example, I honestly want to attend every session between my opening keynote Wednesday morning, and Dr. Cudjoe's Conference Keynote on the importance of social connections and complex social challenges such as social isolation. I chose the conference theme in part because of the work we are doing at the Richmond Health and Wellness Program directly addressing social determinants of health and health disparities. Several President's Spotlighthted Sessions will celebrate this important work. For qualitative researchers, I want to highlight the session following Dr. Cudjoe's keynote, Using Photovoice among Older Adults: Methods, Implementation, and Dissemination, where two researchers use visuals in community-based participatory research. Following Wednesday's second poster session, we finish with a dine-around. Sign up early, as these fill quickly. If you don't make it there are a lot of other great restaurants within walking distance.

Starting at 8 AM on Thursday, we will have breakfast for the early birds. Come and have a coffee and connections breakfast with the Council of Past Presidents to share how SGS can continue to engage in eliminating health disparities, as an organization, related to our top priority areas. The Silent Auction opens in the morning and is named this year in honor of Dr. James Peacock who passed away last year. Dr. Peacock, a Professor at Appalachian State who was a friend and confidant, was actively involved in the governance of SGS and served as president in 2012-13. Having been a well-accomplished thrifter, he was always a major auction donor and brought many delightful and sometimes quirky items.

There are many excellent papers and presentations on Thursday, including one of several Carework Network Sessions throughout the program. This panel discussion and workshop after breakfast will engage attendees to explore how they can use different media to hone their messages and get their work out to key audiences in an effort to advocate, educate, and empower others to change practice on behalf of older adults and their care partners. Be sure to join us for our Awards Luncheon with your fancy or festive hat as we celebrate our winners.

As with the case on both Wednesday and Friday, I want to attend every session on Thursday and have highlighted two sessions in the afternoon, provided by staff at the Virginia Department of Aging and Rehabilitative Services, a Platinum sponsor this year along with the VCU Department of Gerontology. These sessions are especially pertinent for 25 Virginia Area Agency on Aging staff from across the state, who took advantage of scholarships offered by Dr. Ishan Williams at UVA, through a grant awarded by Virginia Center on Aging's Geriatric Training and Education (GTE) initiative.

At Concurrent Session G, I have highlighted a session that shares five different dementia education initiatives across Virginia funded in part by the Virginia Geriatric Education Center's Geriatric Workforce Enhancement Program and the GTE initiative. Join us for a networking event at 6 PM with free drinks and hors d'oeuvres provided by the University of Maryland, Baltimore, University of Maryland, Baltimore County, and Sigma Phi Omega. Finally, the Student and Early Career Committee are hosting a networking event at Circuit Social starting at 7:45.

We feed attendees well, and Friday is no exception. Starting with breakfast at the SGS Business Meeting, which is probably the most enjoyable business meeting at any conference! There are some great concurrent sessions, including another Carework Network Spotlight Session, and high school students will present their experiences creating Memory Boxes for the: Gerontology and High School Engineering: Building & Creating Educational Memories. I have highlighted two sessions in the program, another Richmond Health and Wellness presentation, and a workshop on Practicing Anti-Ageism Together in the afternoon. We top off the evening with the President's Reception. Saturday's Closing Breakfast Panel is a discussion on reimagining academic retirement followed by a Walk/Roll Cycle Service Event along the Elizabeth River Trail. What fun!

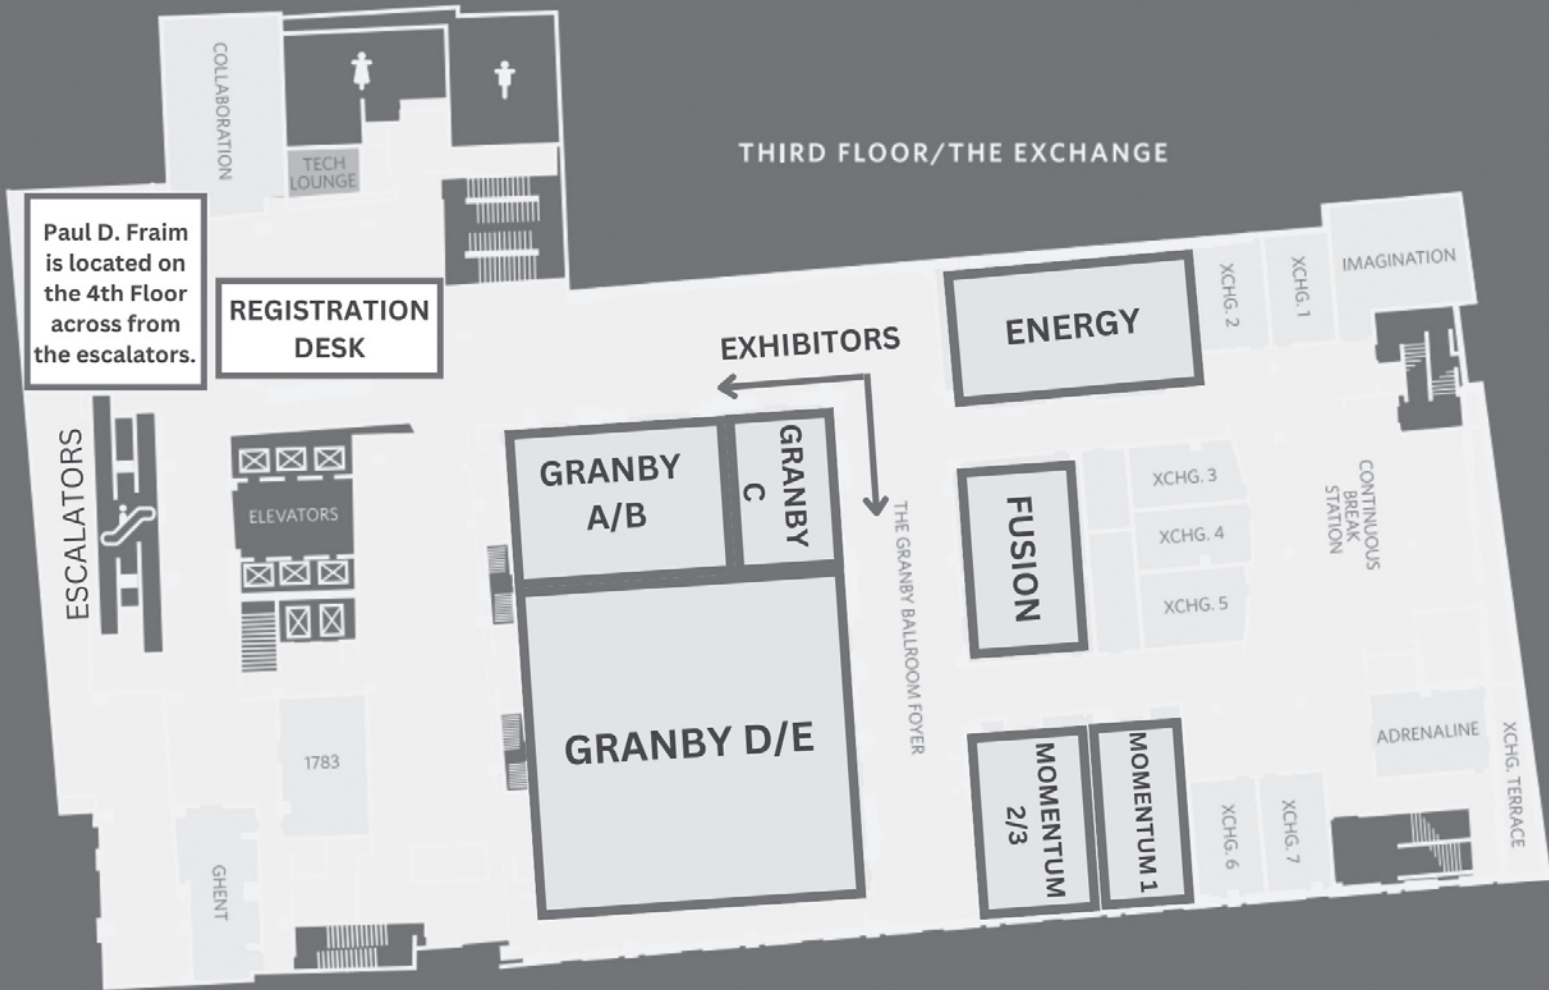

Many thanks to our Program Committee, led by Christy Jensen and Ishan Williams, who assisted with both the conceptualization and title of this year's conference and to the volunteers who reviewed over 150 abstract submissions. A resounding THANK YOU to all of our Sponsors and Exhibitors for their support. Please be sure to thank them throughout the conference. I would also like to thank our SGS Executive Director, Amanda James, for her steadfast determination and commitment to detail as she led the planning and development of this conference.

Finally, I truly hope you enjoy your time at this conference, and I hope to see you again in Greenville, SC next year!

Sincerely,
Leland "Bert" Waters, Ph.D.

EXHIBIT HALL PASSPORT CONTEST

SGS thanks each of our exhibitors for participating in this year's annual conference. Because of their support, we have been able to provide exceptional support for our attendees. Please help to show your support by visiting each booth and playing the exhibitor game!

ATTENDEES: Here's how the game is played!

- Your passport card is in your attendee bags. They are printed on BRIGHT GREEN paper.
- Attendees will need to visit at least 12 exhibitors listed and get their passports "stamped" at every booth on their Passport Game card. Be sure that the representative places a sticker below their own company name.
- Once all stamps have been received (from each exhibitor), passports can be deposited into a drop-box located at the Conference Registration Desk before the end of the conference. Please be sure to include your email so you can be contacted about your prize.
- Please do not lose your game cards. But if you do, we have more at the guest services booth.
- Only attendees registered to attend the Conference are eligible to participate and to win.

INNOVATIVE AND TRANSFORMATIVE

Caregiver Support

As leaders in addressing caregiver needs, Riverside supports the Southern Gerontological Society.

At the Riverside Center for Excellence in Aging and Lifelong Health (CEALH) in Williamsburg, Virginia, we are called to examine all aspects of age-related diseases. Through the implementation of evidence-informed and evidence-based programs, we seek to improve the health of our community. CEALH is pleased to partner with SGS members on grant projects and community programs to support older adults, persons with memory loss and their caregivers.

As we look to our next 20 years and beyond, CEALH's name is changing to The Martha W. Goodson Center and we look forward to our continued partnership with SGS.

AGING, HEALTH AND SOCIETY GRADUATE CERTIFICATE

The Aging, Health, and Society Graduate Certificate in the Department of Sociology at Appalachian State prepares students for careers requiring knowledge and skills in areas relating to aging populations and their health, as well as training towards pursuing advanced degrees. Emphasis is placed on knowledge about sociological and related processes of normal aging; social factors that influence health outcomes; theory, research, and professional career preparation; and public policies pertaining to older populations and the delivery of health care. The program also is approved by the North Carolina Division of Health Service Regulation to offer the Administrator-in-Training Program. The 12 credit hour (4 course) program is fully-online and asynchronous, and can be completed within one academic year or alongside another graduate degree program at the university.

Master of Health Administration

APPALACHIAN STATE UNIVERSITY

App State's Masters of Health Administration program in the Beaver College of Health Sciences was founded in 2016. Our mission is to prepare early and mid-careerists in advanced health care management principles, concepts, and applications in a online environment. Our graduates are prepared to advance their management career in a variety of health care organizations, including, but not limited to, hospitals, long-term care, urgent care, research facilities, mental health, bio-tech organizations, and medical health equipment companies. The MHA program at App State is well-known for embodying Appalachian's mission by preparing students to lead purposeful lives as engaged health care executives who are eager to acquire and create knowledge, promote a spirit of inclusion, communicate effectively, and think critically. The online MHA program connects busy professionals with the knowledge and skills to lead health care organizations, without having to relocate. In addition to a strong core curriculum in general health administration, students have two possible areas of focus: health care leadership and health informatics, as well as the option to pursue an MHA/MBA dual degree.

SGS Announces New Teaching Repository

The goal of the SGS Teaching Resource Repository is to promote and support the maintenance and expansion of options for aging focused education in a range of disciplines beyond gerontology. To do so, we develop and collect materials related to aging, so SGS members and the public can easily find the materials they need. Most materials are open to the public, while some materials are only available to SGS members by request of the owner.

Learn more and share your materials at:

Alzheimer's Disease and Dementia Care Seminar

Denise Scruggs, University of Lynchburg- Beard Center on Aging

This interactive seminar provides an overview of dementia and encourages participants to view individuals living with dementia as unique persons rather than a diagnosis. It offers non-pharmacological strategies for successfully addressing dementia behaviors such as hoarding, repetitive behaviors, paranoia, hallucinations, sundowning, aggression, and wandering. In addition, it covers effective communication techniques, sex and intimacy activities, caregiver stress, staff and family relationships, end-of-life issues, pain management, depression, personal care, and more.

This class meets one of the requirements for becoming a Certified Dementia Practitioner through the National Council of Certified Dementia Practitioners. To learn more about certification and your eligibility, go to www.nccdp.org.

Creative Wellness for Staff and Clients

Ariadne Gejevski, ariadnART

Attendees will participate in a painting lesson that raises self-awareness, innate talents, personal interests, the lowering of stress levels, and the perception of one's own basic feelings, in doing something new. All in a process of striving for a personal mental and emotional state of well-being for staff and clients. Some people may participate, and others may wish to observe. This lesson and 10 more will be shared in how to plan and initiate activities in order to promote self-healing for both. As an educator of art and an art therapist, my objective has always been in introducing task-oriented projects that stress dexterity and proficiency in mastering or regaining self-sufficiency of fine motor skills. That isn't enough. It is well understood that personal well-being is just as important to staff as it is for clients. This workshop will present a unique, well tested, creative approach in dealing with personal wellness and how staff can have a successful partnership with clients when both are working on the same wellness goal and are enjoying what they are doing.

PRESIDENT'S OPENING KEYNOTE BREAKFAST The Interplay of Social Determinants of Health and Health Disparities

Dr. Bert Waters, Virginia Center on Aging at Virginia Commonwealth University

In the summer of 2020, we conducted a mixed-methods study of low-income older adults living in Richmond, Virginia, during demonstrations in reaction to the murder of George Floyd, which intersected with the pandemic in unique ways. Two complementary papers, one quantitative, and one qualitative were published in a special issue of Gerontology & Geriatrics Medicine highlighting the COVID-19 pandemic effects on older adults. Participants were recruited through Virginia Commonwealth University's Richmond Health and Wellness Program. One hundred telephone surveys were conducted using the 92-question Epidemic–Pandemic Impacts Inventory Geriatric (EPII-G) with a 15-question Racial/Ethnic Discrimination addendum. Fifteen participants were recruited from among the survey participants who were interviewed using a semi-structured interview guide developed by the research team. Our qualitative findings supported findings from our EPII-G survey where we found that the challenges our participants faced, while exacerbated by the pandemic, were not new. We found remarkable resilience and coping strategies in response to challenges participants experienced throughout their life, which benefited them when faced with the pandemic, social unrest, and political events that took place. This presentation will offer findings from our study and guide attendees through social, environmental, and behavioral factors that play a larger role in determining health outcomes.

Exploring Mutually Beneficial Intergenerational Mentorship

Dr. Jodi Teitelman, Virginia Commonwealth University
Dr. Graham Rowles, University of Kentucky
Taylor Everly, Mercer University

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The SGS Encore Committee, composed of SGS members with decades of experience in both academic and practice sectors, provides mentoring opportunities to younger Society members to support their graduate studies, early careers, and overall professional development. This joint session with the SGS Student and Early Career Committee, will provide an overview of the Encore Mentorship Program focusing on the potential reciprocity of mentor-mentee relationships. For example, mentoring recipients traditionally gain support and feedback, while the mentors may gain “tech” advice and a sense of generativity. This workshop will briefly describe the mentoring process, first from the perspective of a student and then from that of a current Encore Committee member. But the primary focus of the session will be on sharing experiences among generations of participants through one-on-one or small group discussions. Mentorship areas to be discussed will be determined by student participants and may include research, thesis/dissertation, teaching, academic/practice career preparation, program development, program evaluation, and program directing. These interactions will focus on establishing new mentor-mentee partnerships and encouraging ongoing mentorship relationships that will reinforce the intergenerational focus of the Society.

Interprofessional Age-Friendly Practice in the Community Addressing Social Determinants of Health: The Richmond Health and Wellness Program

PAUL D. FRAIM

Dr. Patricia Slattum, Virginia Center on Aging at Virginia Commonwealth University

Kathie Hendrick Falls, Dr. Pam Parsons, Dr. Lana Sargent, and Dr. Kimberly Battle, VCU School of Nursing

Corrie Malone, Virginia Commonwealth University

TRACK | AGE-RELATED HEALTH AND WELLNESS

The Richmond Health and Wellness Program (RHWP) offers care coordination and wellness services for low income older and disabled adults in urban Richmond, VA through weekly clinics in affordable senior apartment buildings and the VCU Health Hub delivered by interprofessional teams of health professions students and faculty since 2012. Program participants often experience multimorbidity, polypharmacy, adverse social determinants of health and health disparities, and the program strives to build self-management skills and connect participants with services to meet their health and wellness needs. Working with the Virginia Commonwealth University Geriatric Workforce Enhancement Program and the Institute for Healthcare Improvement, RHWP developed 4Ms workflows and attained Age-Friendly designation. This panel symposium will 1) describe RHWP and the lessons learned in its Age-Friendly Practice journey, 2) illustrate student learning impacts through a recent digital badging initiative focused on 4Ms care, 3) demonstrate the continuous improvement approach used by RHWP to link community and program identified needs to new program development and evaluation through the VCU Brain Health Initiative and its supports the Mind M at RHWP, and 4) describe the RHWP Prescription Produce Plan pilot as an exemplar of the initiatives that RHWP undertakes along with the community to address social determinants of health and prepare future healthcare practitioners. The panel will discuss the facilitators and barriers to success and lessons learned across these initiatives related to trust building, community connection, and student attitudes and self-efficacy, as well as future directions for these kinds of health and wellness promotion programs.

Trauma-Informed and Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Practices: Striving for Belonging and Empowerment

MOMENTUM 2/3

Dr. Jennifer Craft Morgan, Georgia State University

Dr. Kendra Jason, University of North Carolina Charlotte

Dr. Leigh-Anne Royster, Duke University

Dr. Gigi Amateau, Virginia Commonwealth University

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

The COVID-19 pandemic, as a widespread and global experience, caused whole communities to experience collective trauma (e.g., social isolation, burnout, job loss, uncertainty, lack of psychological safety). Systemic racism is another collective trauma that impacts large groups of people who are more likely to be impacted by other vulnerabilities due to disparities that are economic, health-related, and environmental. Older workers, people of color, immigrants, older care recipients, and direct care workers are more likely to experience the compounding effects of these dual collective traumas. Trauma informed practices, especially those that attend to the social ecology and intersectionality of experience and identities, can support organizations to reform their culture in ways that explicitly foster diversity, equity, inclusion and ultimately belonging and empowerment of individual community members. This panel session explores the interplay between DEI practices and Trauma-Informed approaches. First, we will map out the evidence of collective trauma experienced by many minoritized older workers and those in aging services and long-term care sectors. Second, we will explain the principles of a trauma-informed approach and how retention and empowerment practices can support transformation of organizational culture. Finally, we will demonstrate how holistic approaches that embrace both sets of ideas can result in belonging for community or organizational members. Implications for leadership, management, retention, and quality of life will be discussed. Participant attendees will leave this session with priority DEI action items to implement trauma-informed practices on individual, organizational, and community levels.

Community Engagement with African American Clergy: Best Practices for Working with African American Clergy

Studies report racial differences in the use of formal and informal supports with African American older adults. It is important for researchers and practitioners to incorporate culturally appropriate interventions when working with underrepresented populations. Faith based interventions is one such approach that includes a range of different types and patterns of care. Evidence has been documented in several studies on help-seeking behaviors that African American elder adults tend to use the church and clergy to cope with mental health challenges. Given the importance of African American clergy in the provision of mental health, the purpose of this panel is to discuss findings on how clergy in this study provided faith based culturally competent practices to their older adults in need.

Using Photovoice among Older Adults: Methods, Implementation, and Dissemination

TRACK | ENVIRONMENT & LOCATION: THE POWER OF PLACE

Translation of research to viable steps forward remains a daunting task in community-based participatory research studies. While many methods can capture ideas of place, using photovoice or photo-elicitation offers a unique opportunity for older adults to visually represent their environment. This presentation will share two separate photovoice projects set in and around Baltimore County, Maryland, and then share research protocols, implementation, and dissemination of each study. One study's goal is to have older adults co-create the research by using their Smartphones to take pictures of what "home" means to them. As part of the study, older adults were interviewed via Zoom about the meaning of home and their community or neighborhood. The other study examines perspectives of the food environment for adults with hypertension. Findings were disseminated among multiple community stakeholders, including policymakers, community organizations, and community members themselves. This includes how findings were used in planning, agenda setting, and implementation of a stakeholder meeting on food equity. In addition to discussing findings, best practices in creating study protocols to address Institutional Review Board (IRB) concerns about using photovoice will be shared, as ways to ensure that the design is truly co-created with older adults and that planning is older adult-inclusive, and, in one instance, how to navigate and conduct a photovoice study in a completely virtual arena.

What's Next? Honoring Life After Caregiving

PAUL D. FRAIM

Mike Verano, Optima EAP

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

There are an estimated 40 million adults in the US providing elder care. While there are uncertainties along the way, what is certain is that at some point the role of caregiver will end. The term post caregiver syndrome, accompanied by reports of lingering depression and/or anxiety are enough to make anyone dread not just the loss of their loved one, but also the psycho-emotional impacts of the loss of this critical role. Caregivers often feel torn between two competing emotions when the person they were caring for passes. On one hand, there is grief, the normal reaction to the death of someone close to them, and, on the other, is a sense of relief. This combination adds to challenges many caregivers face as they attempt to leave their caregiving lives and roles behind them. Adjusting to life after caregiving requires coming to terms with the combined experience of grief and relief. Steps to aid this process may include: establishing post-caregiving support groups and educational programs for preparing for life after caregiving; reframing the caregiving experience as one of growth; offering peer mentoring programs as caregivers have much they can offer to new caregivers; and training professionals to counsel and coach caregivers on adjusting to life post caregiving. With an opportunity to reflect, many caregivers look back on the time spent acting on behalf of another as profoundly meaningful and find the hidden gifts that come from this role.

Home Health Interdisciplinary Approach to Collaborative Care for those with Dementia

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

Carilion Clinic Home Care (CCHC) recognized that our patients with dementia were slipping through the cracks of the traditional medical care model. Needs of patients were not met and caregivers did not know how to manage the care of their loved ones at home. Medical providers faced time constraints and knowledge gaps affecting their ability to educate families and provide needed support. In 2014, CCHC developed an innovative home health Dementia Care program to address the identified needs of these patients. The program provides education and support to patients and their caregivers in managing dementia at home, enhances shared information between home care and primary care providers, and teaches caregivers how to optimize the patient's function with everyday tasks. This presentation will describe the development and implementation of an interdisciplinary approach to assist patients and families suffering from dementia by using specially trained therapists, nurses and social workers embedded within a health system's home health agency. The goal of this program is to promote the best possible safe function for these patients in the home environment. The approach emphasizes collaboration of patients/families, primary care providers, community resources, and state agencies to enhance supports and services to this diverse and vulnerable population.

With an increase in the aging population, there is a high demand for effective service delivery to maintain the quality of life and overall well-being of older adults, particularly in long-term care settings. As a result, it is imperative that healthcare professionals are proficient at delivering effective and efficient comprehensive client-centered care. This session will present foundational concepts related to Interprofessional Education (IPE) as a means of preparing professionals in-training to utilize Interprofessional Practice (IPP) strategies and approaches to maintain the holistic health of older adults residing in nursing homes. Presenters will define IPE and identify core competencies for developing and implementing interprofessional therapeutic practice. In addition, strategies for implementing IPE in an established curriculum will be presented using Old Dominion University's Therapeutic Recreation and Speech-Language Pathology experiential learning program as a model.

The Healthy Brain Initiative funded by the Centers for Disease and Control and Prevention (CDC) is seeking to educate the general public and professionals about brain health, cognitive aging, and the benefits of early detection and diagnosis of dementia. Globally, the incidence of dementia is rapidly increasing and new research is showing that healthy lifestyle choices may reduce our risk of cognitive loss. The Beard Center on Aging at the University of Lynchburg, located in Lynchburg, VA is actively partnering with the CDC and the Virginia Department of Health to collaborate with a number of community partners to increase the impact of public education about brain health, dementia, and age-related health and wellness. This presentation will share current best practices, research, and evidence-based methods of utilizing virtual reality and collaboration as a means of education to generate conversations around cognitive health disparities and empower positive change.

As we know, social determinants of health (SDOH) are the conditions in the environments where people are born, live, learn, work, play, worship, and age that affect a wide range of health, functioning, and quality-of-life outcomes and risks. Interventions to help older people obtain the social and community support they need are critical for improving their health and well-being (<https://health.gov/healthypeople/priority-areas/social-determinants-health>). Some have discovered that creating local "villages" in their neighborhoods can support social and community integration and engagement preventing social isolation and improving this very health and well-being factor in lives as well. The village to village movement has for over 20 years been nurturing the formation of local villages with social connections that enable older adults to enjoy a rich, independent, and healthy quality of life when they choose to age in their homes and communities (vtvnetwork.org).

Vision Boards as a Means of Self-Care

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

There are 56 million adults 65 years and older living in the United States, which accounts for roughly 16.9% of the nation's population and it is projected that by 2030, there will be more than 73.1 million older adults (America's Health Rankings, 2022). Given these staggering numbers, it is important to understand the experiences of older adults, especially regarding caregiving. Caregiving is a physically, emotionally, and mentally taxing responsibility for formal and informal caregivers (Born et al., 2019; Schulz et al., 2020). In addition to the services available to caregivers, there are a variety of creative ways to help older adults and caregivers. One of these is the use of vision boards. Vision boards have been gaining popularity and are being used in several disciplines, such as education and career counseling for children and adolescents (Benedict, 2021; Conderman & Young, 2021; Waalkes et al., 2019). Burton and Lent (2016) describe vision boards as "a collage of images that represents the things an individual wants out of [their] life... to help individuals illuminate for themselves what is important to them." Due to the intense nature of caregiving, older adults and their caregivers lose sight of their personal goals and ambitions. Therefore, implementing vision boards can help them identify growth areas and ways to practice self-care. Vision boards can be completed online, in person, with caregivers or healthcare professionals, other older adults, and even children. Everyone can utilize the vision board for what they need regarding their role in the system.

The Second Episcopal District of the African Methodist Episcopal Church's Health Commission COVID-19 Webinar Series

Older African Americans (OAAs) were disparately impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. Specifically, OAAs were among the most likely to be hospitalized or to die from COVID-19. However, OAAs were not overrepresented among the earliest groups to receive COVID-19 vaccinations. Therefore, community outreach approaches that were culturally authentic were warranted to improve COVID-19 vaccine awareness and to reduce the disparate rates of COVID-19 associated mortality and morbidity among OAAs. Christian churches play an integral role within many African American communities. Interestingly, a recent survey revealed that 75% of African American adults attend church worship services on some interval annually. Therefore, it was plausible that COVID-19 educational approaches via church outreach could prove successful for reducing disparities. The African Methodist Episcopal Church (AMEC) was founded in 1787 and exists as an international church that is organized within episcopal districts. The second episcopal district (SED) is comprised of 379 churches from Maryland, Washington D.C., North Carolina, and Virginia. The AMEC SED's Health Commission designed a series of COVID-19 educational webinars with the goal of informing members of current trends, treatments, and preventive measures for COVID-19. The seminars were well attended via Zoom, Facebook live, and YouTube.

A Modest Proposal: A "Death First" Approach to Teaching Lifespan Development

MOMENTUM 2/3

Dr. Sudha Shreeniwas, University of North Carolina at Greensboro

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The gap between healthcare needs and available services for adults 65 and older is widening, putting the lives and wellbeing of older adults at risk. As educators, the presenters have experienced first-hand the challenges of inspiring "gero-interest" in students training in the helping professions, particularly when course content related to issues of later life is deprioritized in textbooks and course structure. The traditional birth-to-death semester-long approach to teaching lifespan development places issues of later life at the end of busy semesters, when students (and faculty) are focused on final exams and looking forward to a well-earned break. In their own experiences as students and as educators, the presenters have witnessed the ease with which "last-chapter content" is de-emphasized, leaving little time for meaningful engagement with gerontological issues. Coupled with pathologizing of older adulthood in the media and in academia, is it any wonder that "gero-interest" remains tepid for students entering helping professions? In this session, the presenters will introduce an alternative approach to teaching lifespan development that begins with death and ends with birth. Sharing experiences from a gerontological counseling course taught as a summer elective in 2021, the presenters will offer their modest proposal: upending the traditional framework of teaching lifespan development as a way to inspire greater interest and investment in gero-topics from students and faculty alike. In this interactive presentation, feedback and suggestions about this alternative approach will be sought, especially from students and practitioners.

Dementia Friends Information Session: Helping Communities Become Dementia Friendly

ENERGY

George Worthington, Virginia Department for Aging and Rehabilitative Services

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

Dementia affects nearly 6 million Americans, and Alzheimer's disease, the major cause of dementia, is the sixth leading cause of death in the United States. It is the only one of the main causes of death that has no effective treatment or cure, leading to a steady rise in deaths attributed to Alzheimer's disease compared to declines for most of the other main causes. Alzheimer's disease disproportionately affects African Americans and Hispanic Americans, who are two and one and a half times as likely as White Americans to have the disease, partly reflecting the negative impact of social determinants of health. The lack of treatment options and awareness about dementia have contributed to a climate of fear and stigma that can lead to people worried about their cognitive health withdrawing from their community. Dementia Friends and broader community-focused dementia-friendly initiatives can help reduce the stigma and fear surrounding dementia through increasing understanding and awareness of dementia and its broader impact on families. The Dementia Friends session is a vital tool in driving changes that will help people living with dementia and their families remain engaged with, and thrive within, their communities. This session will explain how the Dementia Friends program works, how it can be implemented together with wider dementia-friendly initiatives, and include a Dementia Friends Information Session. Attendees can become Dementia Friends by participating in the session and by choosing a personal dementia-friendly action of their own.

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

In order to present a multi-dimensional view of the experience of growing older in gerontological education, it needs to start with the lived experiences of older adults. This panel presentation is an overview of the Multi-Generational Learning Model that has been used in the graduate Psychology of Aging course in Georgetown University's Masters in Aging and Health Program. Through this model, older adult learning partners join the class on a regular basis for a shared learning experience with students, creating a multi-generational and experiential classroom. Learning partners and students share their perspectives on various topics in the Psychology of Aging and participate in discussions equally. The presentation will describe how the course is structured, including how Learning Partners are invited and included, the creation of an inclusive and reciprocal classroom environment, and reported impact from both students and Learning Partners. In the spirit of person-centered thinking and critical Gerontology, the panel will present a call for action to consider how we can ensure that gerontological education is not offered in an academic vacuum that excludes the participation of older adults, and encourages multi-generational, critical discourse on the lived experience of growing older. In doing so, we hope to prepare emerging gerontologists, those interested in the aging field, and others, to see older adults as us, not them, and create a new paradigm of growing older.

Taking It Personally: Providing Options to Improve Outcomes

Sara Stowe and Liz Havenner, Virginia Department for Aging and Rehabilitative Services

TRACK | DIVERSITY TOPICS IN AGING COMMUNITIES

Increasing caseloads and fewer program dollars and options have left direct service workers feeling overwhelmed and frustrated. The psychological stress created when there is a perceived imbalance between resources and demands is a leading contributor to staff burnout. What if there was a way to reframe those perceptions and to employ person-centered strategies that could ease those perceived imbalances between resources and demands. Is it possible the very people they support have the answers? Person-Centered practice is multi-faceted, benefiting not only the person receiving supports and services but also the direct service workers assisting those individuals. Therefore, taking it personally by practicing person centeredness and programs like Options Counseling will contribute to increased confidence, job satisfaction, and overall wellbeing for staff and those they support; all while improving individual outcomes. This workshop will demonstrate how to utilize Person Centered Thinking (PCT) tools and strategies for providing options to influence individual and organizational change, providing a culture of the core PCT principles of respect, trust, partnership, and collaboration.

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Upon learning that some teachers and schools celebrate the 100th day of school by asking young children to dress up “like a 100-year-old,” a group of gerontologists questioned what ideas about aging are reinforced by such an activity. The “fun” activity of dressing like a centenarian teaches children that it is okay to celebrate at the expense of another segment of the population and that we should expect older people to appear frail, weak, confused, and out of touch. Unfortunately, in our modern society, many people of all ages think of older people and centenarians through the lens of these negative aging stereotypes with little to live for and offering little purpose in our society. We are enculturated to ageism throughout our lives. The sources of enculturation are vast, from subconscious negative impressions left from seemingly innocent birthday cards and anti-aging products (implicit messages) to statements about the appropriate age for societal roles such as president (explicit messages). Partnering with experts in early childhood and elementary education, the team created a toolkit to offer accurate information about centenarians, aging, and ageism and to give teachers options for celebrating the 100th day of school in a way that reinforces important academic content, addresses prekindergarten to second grade learning standards and outcomes, and supports age-inclusivity rather than ageism. The purpose of this presentation is to share data from a pilot study of the curriculum and next steps for advancing aging education among very young learners.

Addressing workforce challenges affecting long-term care and related industries must be informed by a conceptual framework that acknowledges employer needs and the unique circumstances affecting employees. In fall 2022, we hosted a state-wide geriatric workforce summit with a two-fold purpose: (1) identify challenges with recruitment and retention in long term care workforce and (2) formulate opportunities to build a pipeline of talent while being adaptive to a new generation of employees. Frontline staff, licensed professionals, managers, and directors attended the half-day event to share their perspectives on factors influencing recruitment and retention of employees in the senior service and care sector and identify strategies to reverse current trends resulting in the shrinking of the eldercare workforce. In addition to wages and benefits, small group discussions identified barriers permeating from ageism, low employee morale, and a lack of mentorship and career development opportunities within organizations. Participants shared ideas about the role institutions of higher education and area health education centers can play in overcoming some of the identified challenges. In this session, we will share the findings of our geriatric workforce summit and exchange ideas that can make delivery of long-term care services and supports to older people an attractive career choice.

PTCG: Coping with Post Traumatic Caregiving

FUSION

Mike Verano, Optima EAP

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

According to a 2015 AARP study, over 40 million Americans are caregivers. While we know a lot about the experiences of this group—the financial, mental, and emotional impact—what is not always clear is how they entered into their caregiver roles. Studies on stress, burnout, and compassion fatigue have identified the challenges faced by caregivers and often provide survival tips. What has not garnered the same amount of attention is the fact that many people enter into this realm shell-shocked—stunned into emotional turmoil by witnessing a critical moment in the life of a loved one. This experience is best described as post traumatic caregiving, or PTCG for short. When arising out of trauma, caregiving becomes a practice in the awareness that one has been thrown off balance and that multiple demands are drawing on energies, that while heightened, may not be channeled in a positive direction. This workshop offers insights into the nature of PTCG and practical tips for coping with its fallout, while at the same time practicing the art of caregiving.

access to home and community based services through effective partnerships, holistic supports with person-centered practices, and essential resources that address quality of life through the social determinants of health. In this workshop, participants will see both the easy-to-use "front end" of the public-facing website, and also see the "back end" of state and national databases that feed into localized results.

Assessing What Matters Most to Persons with Dementia and Their Caregivers: An Interprofessional, Interactive Learning Strategy

The 4Ms of Age-Friendly Healthcare frames medical care of older adults around what Matters Most, Medications, Mobility, and Mentation. As the US population ages, more older adults are living with a dementia diagnosis and often receive care from a spouse or other family member. The family caregiver is uniquely positioned to incorporate effective strategies to care for their loved one as the dementia progresses; however, they often lack understanding of how to best provide that care. Assessing what Matters Most to the older adult and family is one way to prioritize the needs of such patients and provides an opportunity to incorporate an interprofessional approach to care. Good dementia care should include resources that an interprofessional team can provide, for example, by incorporating strategies from physical and occupational therapy, social work, and the medical team. This innovative workshop will focus on providing attendees with the skills to assess What Matters Most to an older adult living with dementia and their spouse within the context of an interprofessional team visit. Attendees will learn how to provide resources and support that incorporate a patient-centered approach. To apply these concepts, attendees will participate in an interactive simulation activity with a standardized patient and family caregiver. A group debrief will be used to reinforce learning.

Working with Sexual and Gender Minority Older Adults

Dr. Jeffrey Lentz, Emory University

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The sexual and gender minorities population continues to age and is at risk for utilizing long-term care services. This poses an issue for long-term service administrators and staff as they are not prepared to provide inclusive quality care for sexual and gender minority older adults. In order to give quality inclusive care to older sexual and gender minority adults, long-term care administrators and staff need to have a basic understanding of terms, history, trauma, and intolerance sexual and gender minorities experienced throughout their life course. In addition, learn how to make their communities safe, welcoming, and inclusive for sexual and gender minority older adults. This workshop will give participants an overview and best practices for working with older sexual and gender minority adults in personal care homes, assisted living communities, and nursing homes. Topics include terms, historical trauma, discrimination, prejudice, dementia, statistics, and resources to make communities safe, welcoming, and inclusive.

Best Practices for Teaching Dying, Death, and Bereavement During a pandemic

The class topic of Dying, Death, and Bereavement is central to a gerontology education, but during a pandemic this topic poses new challenges. Currently, I teach this course at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, known for high admittance of first generation college students. This population of students also experience, as do their families and friends, many of the social characteristics that led to higher rates of contraction and death from COVID. A number of students personally lost multiple family members. The recent deaths make learning about this topic challenging. This presentation focuses on the best practices of teaching a common course that contains new meaning with the pandemic. I will share some of the strategies I employed in the class to focus on learning while also supporting students who at times struggled with the content of the course due to personal experience.

Utilizing Evidence-Based Practice to Impact Gerontological Education and Professional Development

Dr. Tracy McClinton, University of Tennessee Health Science Center

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

In the age of new technologies and pharmaceutical breakthroughs, improving the geriatric population's health is a primary concern to ensure aging adults receive evidence-based care which enables them to thrive in society. Teaching advanced practice nursing (APRN) students evidence-based practice competencies to implement change is a key approach to improving patient safety and healthcare outcomes. Evidence-based practice (EBP) competencies are best practices for improving health care outcomes, as evidence informs us on how to implement practice changes. The Seven Steps of Evidence-Based Practice Model incorporates change utilizing EBP competencies which begin with a spirit of inquiry in asking the appropriate questions to improve care in the geriatric population. Subsequent competencies include: 1) formulating a strong P-I-C-O-T question, which includes the population, intervention, comparison, outcome, and time when appropriate, 2) searching the databases for the correct evidence, 3) critically appraising the evidence, 4) synthesizing the evidence, 5) integrating the evidence, 6) evaluating the outcomes, and 7) disseminating the findings. Teaching these EBP skills to advanced practice nurses who care for our aging older population is vital to ensure best practices are implemented in our clinics, hospitals, pharmacies, rehabilitation centers, long-term care facilities, and everywhere care is provided for the geriatric patient. This pedagogical strategy of teaching evidence-based practice competencies aligns with National Organization of Nurse Practitioner Faculties (NONPF) Core Competencies of the nurse practitioner and the American Association of Colleges of Nurses (AACN) Essentials. Utilization of specific tools in teaching EBP competencies improves safety and healthcare outcomes within the geriatric population.

The latest advances in medicine are awe-inspiring. However, most of us experience a huge gap between the marvels of medical technology and the actual experience of trying to navigate an increasingly complex and uncertain healthcare system. Being a patient, dealing with the uncertainty of illness and its impact, is often lonely and confusing. The late Dr. Susan Massad was an innovative primary care physician and community organizer who, in the mid-1980's, pioneered a method for engaging this gap, empowering patients, and supporting the patient/doctor relationship: health teams! Health teams - made up of patients and their friends, family, and colleagues - socialize the health process and place an emphasis on collective decision-making. Over the last four decades, dozens of health teams, some lasting a few months, others a few years, have been formed. Each is unique, but all revolve around the belief that illness is a communal experience and an understanding of emotional growth as possible for all involved. Since Dr. Massad's death in 2021, interest in health teams has increased, with growing numbers of people, including those living with dementia, cancer, and other serious conditions, are experimenting with this new modality of care. We hope you will join us for a creative and philosophical exploration of collaborative health.

Primary care can contribute to dementia management through screening, exclusion of treatable contributors, optimal inpatient care, and subsequent aftercare. Although many primary care venues manage dementia well, others are less successful. Challenges include knowledge limitations, difficult care coordination, therapeutic nihilism, and clinician burnout. Consequences entail delayed diagnosis, non-disclosure of diagnosis, diagnostic errors, hospitalization complications, and ineffective aftercare. These adversities are magnified for African-American, rural, and underinsured patient populations. A variety of innovative educational interventions addressing these issues have arisen, catalyzed in part by the COVID epidemic, and of which the Virginia Geriatric Education Center's Geriatric Workforce Enhancement program has sponsored five. These include a Project ECHO (Extension for Community Healthcare Outcomes) series regarding primary care for dementia, a caregiver empowerment webinar, an outreach program to rural practices and underserved patient constituencies, microlearning sessions on dementia care for our primary care providers, and resident physician education concerning dementia, geriatrics, and social determinants of health. All have achieved initial success yet face challenges to reaching their full potential. The symposium will begin with a brief overview of the status of dementia primary care, including challenges and opportunities. The aim is to provide context for subsequent presentations wherein each of the 5 presenters will then describe their respective programs. The session will conclude with questions and answers, as well as a summarization and consideration of how to move forward.

Researchers from the University of South Florida's Florida Policy Exchange Center on Aging will present research on staffing in nursing homes (NHs) and assisted living communities (ALCs) that aim to improve care provision. The first study addresses the NH workforce shortage in Florida, where 700 NHs serve nearly 85,000 residents. With a shortage of nurse aides, it is challenging to meet staffing level standards. To address this issue, Florida recently implemented a new law that allows unlicensed personal care attendants (PCAs) to be counted as part of the workforce staffing levels. In the first study, results of the PCA program's effectiveness as rated by administrators. Qualitative responses from administrators will also be discussed. The second study focuses on ALs, where nearly 40% of the more than 800,000 older residents had a diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease or related disorder (ADRD). We will present the protocol of a clinical trial to test the efficacy of a music intervention to reduce agitation in a sample of residents with ADRD (N=160). The third study will present a palliative care education in AL intervention for staff caring for persons with ADRD. We will share lessons learned from pilot studies that developed and tested the intervention in a sample of 10 ALs among 118 residents with ADRD and 23 nursing staff and administrators. Intervention development, recruitment, data collection, and data analysis will be discussed. The fourth study will present the usability findings from a mobile music application for caregivers of persons with dementia (N=6). We will share caregiver experiences and recommendations after testing the app over 2 weeks in their homes and discuss the implications for wider adoption of technology-based music interventions in AL.

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

In the U.S., older Black adults are approximately twice as likely as older whites to develop dementia. These disparities have arisen from inequality in life experiences, socioeconomic, and environmental health, access to healthcare, and other factors linked to dementia risk and delayed diagnosis. Further, the direct care workforce that supports those living with dementia in residential and home and community-based settings are predominately women, people of color, and more likely to be immigrants. This workforce consistently experiences low job quality including low pay, few benefits, and heavy workloads which replicates disparities in health and well-being. Solutions to reduce these disparities, both for individuals living with dementia and the workforce that supports them, need to systematically address the ecology of factors that contribute to their persistence. This panel symposium will a) overview the dementia-related disparities and highlight the voices of older Black adults living with dementia, b) espouse a competency-based approach to reforming systems of care to increase societal awareness of dementia and related disparities, and empower communities using education, culture change, and quality improvement, and c) overview existing resources and envision improved models for person-centered dementia care focused on quality of life and well-being. Speakers will emphasize practical implications and invite attendees to collaborate in a visioning exercise where disparities are reduced and eliminated.

One of the results of the pandemic for nursing home residents was that residents were isolated in their rooms for safety reasons, leading to extreme social isolation and the cessation or reduction in Resident Council meetings at most facilities. North Carolina State University (NC State) School of Social Work and community partner Friends of Residents in Long-Term (FOR) had received a Civil Monetary Penalty grant prior to the pandemic aimed at developing resource material and supports to enhance the operation of nursing home Resident Councils in North Carolina. These resources and supports were developed primarily through virtual collaboration among stakeholders, including nursing home residents, during the pandemic. Five short videos and an accompanying manual were developed on different aspects of Resident Council development and operation. Regional ombudsmen were trained and used to introduce videos and the manual at five nursing homes in North Carolina. After these were piloted, a team member conducted semi-structured interviews to evaluate Resident Council reactions to the material. Responses were generally favorable, and at least one nursing home decided to include the first video in its new resident orientation. This panel presentation describes the design and purpose of the project, the importance of residents having a voice in the care they receive, and how Resident Councils are an important component of collective advocacy in long-term care settings.

Community-Based Training in Care of Older Adults: Opportunities for Emergency Medical Services Providers

ENERGY

Kimberly Davis, Virginia Commonwealth University

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

There is an identified need to provide Emergency Medical Services (EMS) providers with foundational knowledge and skills in care of older adults. EMS providers are uniquely positioned to recognize, intervene, and connect older adults and caregivers to community resources. Further, they can provide invaluable information and referrals to primary care providers (PCP), including partnering with the PCP for long-term management. However, they receive little to no formal training in best practices for care of older adults. This ongoing HRSA-funded project incorporates a two-pronged approach to training EMS providers: (1) training in advance care planning needs including introduction of the Physician Orders for Scope of Treatment, medical-ethical conversations in end of life, and patient advocacy; and (2) training on the challenges of living with dementia from both the patient and caregiver perspectives including disease progression, management, communication skills, and community resources. Training was provided to EMS providers in Northern Virginia in 2022 and will be expanded to Southwest Virginia during 2023. Content aligns with goals set forth in the Dementia State Plan 2020-2024: Building a Dementia Capable Virginia which seeks to incorporate a public health approach to mitigate its impact. As front line workers, EMS providers are uniquely poised to help with early identification for older adults who would benefit from referral and early treatment, thereby reducing disease and disability.

The Importance of Informal Social Networks for Mid-Career Professionals in Gerontological Education

TRACK | GERONTOLOGICAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

As gerontology programs in higher education institutions have experienced periods of both expansion and contraction in the past 25 years, one constant has been the collaboration of academics in aging both within and across institutions, particularly academics from the same cohort. In this panel discussion, five scholars and SGS members, all trained in the 2000s, provide examples of these collaborations, across topics that include family caregiving supports, health care and long-term care disparities, the recruitment of the direct care workforce, and the regulation of long-term supportive services. This discussion is intended to illuminate how informal social networks have helped now mid-career academics achieve professional growth while making substantial contributions to the base of knowledge in a still emerging discipline.

Dr. Faika Zanjani, VCU College of Health Professions

Dr. Elvin Price, VCU School of Pharmacy

TRACK | AGE-RELATED HEALTH AND WELLNESS

The problems that intersect healthy aging and society are complex, and many health and wellness issues affecting minoritized older adults are related to social determinants of health and health disparities. Effectively addressing these issues requires coordinated service, teaching, and research efforts across multiple disciplines. Our transdisciplinary team includes a network of health service delivery and community partners that work synergistically with academic researchers toward addressing the community's health and wellness needs. Addressing the disparities affecting low-income older adults aging in place requires an authentic partnership with the community. As a part of our mission to address community concerns and advance social equity, we developed a Community Advisory Council. The Advisory Council meets to ensure the community's voice is integrated into a sustainable program of research and service. The team is focusing on health and wellness needs identified by the community. We will discuss programs addressing 1) factors affecting digital health access and use, 2) food insecurity, 3) health and behavior change with health coaching, 4) personalized medication approaches with pharmacogenomics, and 5) substance use disorder. Each program relies on partnership equity between the university and various community partners. Collectively these programs nurture communities by enhancing the social and health aspects of daily living. The team members will present the health and wellness outcomes from each of these programs and describe how the team's shared work has impacted our understanding of what is needed to create sustainable solutions to address complex social health problems for older adults.

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

A person's trajectory into, through, and between long-term care settings is influenced by multiple stakeholders. Some of these stakeholders are not often acknowledged for their role or the value they bring to supporting older adults to have high-quality care and high quality of life. This panel session explores three stakeholder groups and their influence on the care and support trajectories of older adults across long-term care settings. The first paper explores the role that geriatric doctors play (or fail to play) in shaping how aging is understood by society at large, and the effects that this limited understanding has on the choices that individuals, families, and institutions make to address it. The second paper describes the journey of a family caregiver turned advocate and discusses the multiple ways family caregivers feel disenfranchised, and how organizations can utilize family caregivers to support and serve as essential collaborators to enrich the lives of loved ones in their care. The final paper pairs a researcher and a frontline community health worker. This is a case study demonstrating how direct care workers embedded in their communities are uniquely situated to forge bonds of trust with older adults who are vulnerable and medically underserved. The paper also discusses how direct care workers are in a unique position to promote improved outcomes for their patients, because of the frequent contact with both patients and the broad healthcare team. Implications for collaboration and empowerment practices and care system reform will be discussed.

Practicing Anti-Ageism Together

PAUL D. FRAIM

Dr. Tracey Gendron, Virginia Commonwealth University

TRACK | ADVOCACY FOR AND BY OLDER ADULTS

This interactive session will facilitate a conversation about how ageism occurs in our day-to-day lives. Using interactive activities, we will build our capacity and practice techniques to respond to ageism in personal and professional situations. This session will allow participants to build their knowledge of ageism's physical, mental, and societal effects and how language can shape ageist and anti-ageist views. Through a mixed format of presentation and active workshop participation, attendees will discover, brainstorm, and practice methods to speak up, share knowledge, and help others recognize the value of an anti-ageist society. Come ready to have fun and participant in vibrant and productive conversations!

These opportunities provide a space for recognition of academic and professional excellence and continued contribution to outstanding work with and for older adults. The target audience is students, professionals, and faculty. All are welcome into membership, and we provide opportunities for graduating with honors, as well as elected service at the international level through our many leadership positions.

Considerations for Practitioners Working with Gender and Sexual Minority Elders at the End of Life from an Ecological Perspective

ENERGY

Dr. Kate Morrissey Stahl and Dr. Kyle Bower, University of Georgia

TRACK | DIVERSITY TOPICS IN AGING COMMUNITIES

Join an AASECT certified sex therapist/clinical social worker and a gender and sexuality researcher as they review considerations for working with gender and sexual minority clients at the end of life. The importance of intimate expression continues throughout one's life span, including when one approaches the end of life. Caregivers, focused on treatment of symptoms, often fail to consider sexual needs and preferences. This lack of focus on psychological and physical needs associated with intimate expression may be especially pronounced for people who identify as a sexual or gender minority. Reasons for a lack of focus among practitioners include conflicting moral beliefs, lack of knowledge regarding inclusive resources, discomfort exploring sexual needs, and cultural stigma against SGM individuals. Bronfenbrenner's ecosystemic framework is used to illuminate how practitioners can support end-of-life sexuality and intimacy among SGM patients in multiple nested contexts. These contextual levels move from the macrosystem through the microsystem and factor in transitions, shifts, and the historical context by inclusion of the chronosystem. We provide suggestions for healthcare practitioners who interact with people at the end of life to theoretically conceptualize and intervene at each intersecting level. Our overarching goal is to inform the creation of more culturally responsive environments in which individuals are comfortable expressing their gender and sexual identity if they choose to do so and where caregivers recognize and support patients' desires for intimate expression.

TRACK | CAREGIVING, CARE SUPPORT, AND CARE PARTNERSHIPS

The recently released (2022) RAISE Report was developed by advisory councils of the federal Recognize, Assist, Include, Support and Engage Family Caregivers and Supporting Grandparents raising Grandchildren Acts. This report represents a milestone in the caregiving field in that it serves as the very first National Strategy to Support Family Caregivers. It proposes 5 goals and 350 actions whereby public and private aging service providers can engage in best program and research practices to support the needs of family caregivers of persons with dementia. These recommendations offer unique opportunities for public and private aging service providers to work collaboratively and through interprofessional teamwork to support the caregiving community and to address social determinants of health in dementia care. This workshop will begin with an overview of RAISE Report recommendations, with an emphasis on opportunities for interprofessional collaboration and for addressing disparities. This will be followed by specific program examples of how RAISE's recommendations are being implemented through interdisciplinary approaches in the Commonwealth of Virginia. Presenters will emphasize their professional perspectives as nurses, researchers, and gerontologists, including specific roles that were undertaken with the development of this plan. Time will be allotted for workshop participants to share other disciplinary perspectives as well.

Reengaging in Aging: A Panel Discussion on Reimagining Academic Retirement

Dr. Patricia Slattum, Dr. Daniel Bluestein, Dr. Jodi Teitelman, and Dr. Bert Waters, Virginia Commonwealth University

Dr. Pamela Teaster, Virginia Tech

Dr. Patricia Bach, Eastern Virginia Medical School

The model of retirement as an abrupt ending to professionally contributing to your given field isn't a good fit for academicians who aspire to have a societal impact. For gerontologists and geriatricians who have devoted their academic lives to these fields, reimagining retirement as an individually unique timeline not only benefits institutions, governments, and older people but also has a generative impact on the academicians. We conducted a mixed methods study of gerontologists and geriatricians to better understand how this re-engagement model has met the adaptational challenges of retirement. We elicited respondent perceptions of how their re-engagement has been helpful to their departments, explored how COVID has impacted retirement and re-engagement, and identified suggestions for retirement mentoring. We used two validated surveys, the Retirement Satisfaction Inventory, and the Retirement Experiences Questionnaire, and developed a 14-question interview guide built on earlier work by inquiries regarding the impacts of family and gender roles, and questions concerning the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the negotiation of the developmental challenges of retirement. We also inquired about respondents' perceptions of how a mentorship program can be developed to assist early and mid-career colleagues. This presentation will share insights into our findings in a panel discussion format, where several of our panelists will share their insights as they have reimagined their retirement paths.

WALK/ROLL/CYCLE SERVICE EVENT

SGS invites you to participate in the first of many service projects to provide both immediate and long-lasting benefits to older adults residing in the host city of our conference.

This year, we will be co-hosting a walk/roll/cycle event along the Elizabeth River Trail where SGS members and older adults from the Norfolk community will engage in a stroll/ride followed by refreshments and fellowship.

We are asking all participants to make a donation to participate. All proceeds will benefit a local charity serving older adults in the community. At the time of production, this event was still being planned. More details will be provided in an addendum to the conference program.

We invite you to Be Part Of The Story as SGS continues to grow in both purpose and practice. With your help, the SGS Endowment Campaign will help SGS push forward with both innovation and impact as we support research and practice within the field of gerontology.
